The domain is a part of the Internet address (IP address) of a computer server that is connected to the Internet, such as a website. A domain name is a way to find servers based on what a person wants to search for. For example, www.metropotamus.com might point to a server named www.metropotamus. You can look up domains at many websites, most famously through the domain name search engine called Google. In a typical domain registration procedure, a person or company wishes to own a domain name. Once a website hosting account and domain name are acquired, the owner of the domain can then use the web hosting account to set up an IP address that can be used for the domain name. In this scenario, the owner of the IP address would be providing a service for the owner of the domain name to route web traffic to the website. At this point, the domain has become live and the domain name is available for other webmasters and web users. The process of setting up a domain is a relatively simple process; however, it can be complicated when dealing with renewal of the domain. Renewal of a domain provides any user of the domain or web hosting company a fee to retain the domain name, rather than the owner of the domain paying a fee each year. The following steps would be required to register a domain name: If you want to buy your own domain name, you'll need to do a little bit of checking into who owns that domain name. There are two ways to do this: you can try to find the domain name owner, or you can purchase the domain name you want from someone else. Step 1:
