Two weeks ago we talked about how Microsoft is now offering a Raspberry Pi card. Today I show you what we found out about this new thing. It's basically a Raspberry Pi with a USB port and all the required wires. On one side it has a VGA port. On the other it has the USB port, a power supply and a Raspberry PI card. We just had to plug in our Raspberry Pi and it worked. We used an additional raspberry pi case, but the "expansion board" can fit right in the case of the main board. You don't have to remove the case as long as the case holds the two boards together. We plugged in a USB keyboard and mouse and we can now use them as if we were in our Windows PC. We only plugged it in to check what we can do with it, we don't have an actual plan to use it right now. I'm not really sure what we can do with this, maybe something simple. We'll have to see. I'll have to put a web server and try to access it from our main machine. Maybe we can run the most popular Linux distributions on it. If you have some suggestions please leave a comment. We'll have to take our time to see what we can do with it. We might also have some fun with it! Anatomy The Expansion board This is what it looks like from the front. On the left side you can see the HDMI and VGA ports and the USB ports. The main board This is what the main board looks like. You can see the Raspberry PI card, the power supply and the USB hub. It fits very well in the case.
