The UTC, or "coordinate time" atomic time value is normally 32-bits on 32-bit systems and 64-bits on 64-bit systems. As GPS receivers measure the time interval between a transmitted signal and its own internal clock, all GPS receivers must store their own unique atomic time value. If the value of the UTC is unspecified or set to an invalid value, an error message will be displayed. The maximum range of 0.7s is for GPS receiver signal tracking by the above receivers. The maximum range of 0.7s is for safe use of above GPS receivers. The minimum range of 0.7s is for positioning by the above GPS receivers. The minimum range of 0.7s is for positional accuracy by the above GPS receivers. The minimum range of 0.7s is for the above GPS receivers to hold its own internal clock.
