Background ===== Fractures of the distal radius and ulna are among the most common hand fractures in childhood. Early pain is often the cause of referral to a paediatric hand surgeon. The ability to reduce distal radius and ulna fractures with percutaneous methods is dependent on the intact distal radioulnar joint (DRUJ) anatomy and the soft tissues that support it \[@B1],[@B2]. Case presentation ===== A previously healthy 7-year-old boy was referred to the paediatric hand clinic at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Edinburgh with a fracture of the right wrist. He was not a sport person and fell off a step. He was examined clinically and radiologically at the time of presentation. The right hand was swollen, with limitation of extension of the fingers at the MCP joint. The distal radioulnar joint was swollen and tender on palpation. The patient had no evidence of neurological deficit. Radiographs of the wrist revealed a closed fracture of the distal radius, and there was no evidence of associated fractures (Figures 1{ref-type="fig"} and 2{ref-type="fig"}). !Radiograph of the right wrist at presentation.{#F1} !Radiograph of the right wrist at presentation.{#F2} To reduce the fracture, we used the Seldinger technique to access the distal radial metaphysis and applied traction, as described by Günther \[@B3]. This was done under general anaesthetic and sedation. A parallel Kirschner wire was inserted and used as a guide for further placement of a Steinmann pin, after which traction was applied.
